

PARADIDDLES

Gary Fagan

The composer, being a percussionist, has had the opportunity to work on many technique-building patterns for indefinite pitch instruments known as rudiments. At the same time, there was a necessity to learn scale patterns for use on the mallet percussion instruments as well. Since the percussionist must learn both the rudiments and the scales, the composer thought it would be interesting and appropriate for the wind players to have some exposure to the rudiments. Paradiddles creates patterns played by the winds that mimic two types of paradiddles—the single paradiddle and the double paradiddle. It is the composer's belief that this may be the first piece for concert band inspired by, and based on, percussion rudiments.
